The uncertainty about the occupational situation, caused by the COVID-19 pandemic is still quite common. Serious life decisions, including those regarding the purchase of an apartment, have been put off 'for better times'. - We realize that the decision to purchase one's own apartment is never easy. The uncertainty concerning the stability of employment and the fear of losing one's income have been aggravated by a hopefully recessing coronavirus pandemic. By offering our customers a bonus in the form of a year without instalments and a free insurance against the loss of permanent source of income, we wish to strengthen their sense of comfort, while making purchasing decisions. We're hoping that will allow those still hesitant or postponing the decision to buy, to soon fulfil their dreams of their own apartment– says Nikodem Iskra, the CEO of Murapol Group.

A year without instalments

A year without instalments is a special offer for people who finance the purchase of their apartments with bank loans. The amount of support depends on the apartment price. It assumes that the developer will pay a financial bonus to cover the amount of purchaser's loan instalments in the first year, summing up to 17.5 thousand gross. The amount will be reduced by a 10% tax collected and paid by the Promoter in accordance with applicable regulations.

Free insurance against the loss of the permanent source of income or hospitalization

For all those who fear for the stability of their financial situation we're offering the possibility of the developer covering the insurance against the loss of the permanent source of income or hospitalization. Such insurance remains valid for 12 months, and the entity responsible for the coverage provided under this insurance is only the insurance company.
